

Independent COLORADO SPRINGS the smart alternative

December 6, 2007

Side Dish

Culinary crumbs and gastronomic gossip

By Matthew Schniper and Ralph Routon

J.C.'s grapes

This one needs to be quoted word-for-word:

"When people drink this wine, they are brought to the heights of Mount Tabor overlooking the Jordan River and the Sea of Galilee, and are able to envision Jesus walking through the vineyards of Galilee. They achieve a closer bond with their religion and a closer relationship to the nature of Israel and a deeper understanding of its significance to each person."

Those are the words of student Adam Haroz, who, with his father, founded Haroz Vintners. The Georgia company now imports wines from Israel's Galilee region, and bills them as "the first wines for Christian consumers."

Finally! It's about time someone started looking out for wine connoisseurs who want Jesus on their label.

Visit haroz.com/gog to learn more about The Grapes of Galilee wines.